We invite you to see a small example of what we can achieve when the principal commitment is to manufacture quality products.

Neither the machinery, mass production nor substitute materials are capable of replacing dedication, patience and proud craftsmanship of our artisans working with the nobility and beauty of the original raw materials.

We give special attention to detail, and to the proportion of the design with the highest standards in the use of materials and specifications of construction but most of all:

Hands, patience and pride are the principal elements to preserve the art of woodworking.

Nothing can replace craftsmanship or the beauty and kindness of the original materials.

Images of leisure from the New Spain

are hand painted in this armoire with gilded details and
antiqued mirrors.

Naive, yet sophisticated,
with graceful lines
as they were interpreted in México by the local artisans who were strongly influenced by the european trends of the period.

Graceful lines and care about proportion
make this richly ornamented chair
a piece of character.

Hands, patience and pride are the principal elements
to preserve the art of woodworking.

An eclectic line imposes the necessity of coherence, but the real challenge remains in achieving freshness and elegance

This odd interpretation of a Spanish Bargueño probably from Oaxaca incorporates a technique known as nielado

This original piece shows the blend of elements from different cultures that México acquired as a result of being the bridge between Europe and the West Indies.

Complexity and warmth are seldom seen together.
As an artisan you have a feeling of achievement when it happens.

Contrasting characters that compliment each other,
enriches our collection and gives it a sense of uniqueness.

An ambitious project,
a masterpiece conceived to remain,
to witness success for many generations.
